Christmas Eve had finally come, and Chloe was excited.
A splendid Christmas party! The entire family was invited!

"You may open just one gift tonight," the grown-ups did declare.
And so Chloe chose a present that had been wrapped in gold with care.
She tore away the festive paper that shimmered gloriously.
"A brave and handsome Nutcracker! Someone got him just for me."

Chloe played with him throughout the night, until the guests had gone. Then dozed off in her party dress, her lullaby a Christmas song.

She woke abruptly with a fright—it seemed the room had changed! Everything looked bigger! Chloe suddenly felt strange. The clock struck twelve, as Chloe looked up at the tree so tall. To her surprise she was now barely bigger than a doll!

Then, from the darkness all around,
she heard a frightful chitter.
An army of grey mice appeared,
a swarm of squeaky critters.
They all surrounded Chloe.
Then, their mighty King appeared—on his head he wore a pointy crown, on his face a vicious sneer.

In a flash from the flickering shadows came a fearless battle cry!
Chloe's Nutcracker leaped above, his shining sword held high!

Chloe was courageous and tossed her shoe into the fight.
The Mouse King was so startled that he froze still at the sight!

With Chloe's help, they beat the King and forced the mice to flee.
"We did it, Chloe!" the Nutcracker beamed. "Now won't you come with me...?"

In a cotton candy cloud, they traveled through the sparkling sky.
To a land of Jaelin's favorite treats: cupcakes, cookies, and cherry pie.

The Queen of Treats, the Sugar Plum Fairy, welcomed Jaelin to the fair.
She laid a crown upon his head and danced him through the air.
Giant flowers came to life and joined the revelry.
Marigolds, bluebells, and sunflowers waltzed in twos and threes.

WELCOME

"And now the Festival of Sweets!" the Fairy did decree.
Chloe asked the Nutcracker in awe, "Is this really all for me?"

Spanish twirlers danced flamenco, Russian dancers did ballet.
A French can-can was performed to end the marvelous play.

JAELIN

"And now the Festival of Sweets!" the Fairy did decree.
Jaelin asked the Nutcracker in awe, "Is this really all for me?"

Spanish twirlers danced flamenco, Russian dancers did ballet.
A French can-can was performed to end the marvelous play.
The encore was a tango danced with mystery and flair
by graceful Arabian spinners and Chinese twirlers beyond compare.

And now," the fairy turned and said, "the Stars of this grand show."
 "Who could it be?" Jaelin asked, but soon he'd come to know.
 The Nutcracker took Jaelin's hand and led him to the stage.
 "But I don't know the steps," he said. He smiled. "Don't be afraid."

They danced a Pas De Deux, the likes the court had never seen.
 Jaelin's feet knew every step as if it were a well-known dream.
 They danced and twirled together, in elegant formation.
 The court cheered and applauded with a loud standing ovation.

The graceful Sugar Plum Fairy bid farewell to her new friend, calling forth a magic sleigh to carry Chloe home again.

Chloe and the mighty Nutcracker sat proudly side by side.
With a silent nod of friendship, their grand sleigh took to the skies.
Waving to the Royal Court, she said, "I'll never forget it here!"
They waved goodbye and off they flew, drawn home by magic reindeer.

Chloe then awoke with the toy Nutcracker before her eyes.
She was safe and sound, tucked into bed, and back to her normal size.

Merry Christmas
CHLOE!

Jaelin then awoke with the toy Nutcracker before his eyes.
He was safe and sound, tucked into bed, and back to his normal size.

Merry Christmas
JAE LIN!

Could it all have been just a dream? Jaelin wondered. But: not for long.
Because here at home on Christmas, he was right where he belonged.
